FASHION SHOW PROJECT

BOLT

CONNECTING PEOPLE

In this document, we gathered pictures that reflect our sources of inspiration for the fashion show we aim to organize.

Our sources of inspirations are various.

In this inspiration board you will find pictures of :

- ▶ Social media campaigns done by the UNHCR, Amnesty International and independent NGOs
- ▶ Colourful, high-ended fashion-show scenographies
- ▶ Pictures of fashion workshops in refugee camps and hosting countries
- ▶ Pictures of similar fashion shows organised in fashion schools and in welcome centers
- ▶ Examples of clothes designed by migrants and refugees

"I believe we are all related in some way. We should take it upon ourselves to reunite and leave a lasting legacy for our children."

Emanuel

The fundamental political and economic changes in South Africa in the early 1990s saw many talented people migrate to this country. The mix of people has resulted in South Africa becoming a hot-bed of creativity – particularly in the world of fashion. These immigrants see the country as a land of unlimited opportunities, and they have worked, created and prospered.

One of these immigrants – DRC-born Fashion Designer Emanuel passionately wanted to break into the fashion industry, and most importantly, he wanted to share his fashion skills and knowledge with those less fortunate than him.

Arriving in South Africa in 1999, Emanuel worked diligently to establish his business and a clothing brand. He started the "Muzuri" fashion line as a solid base to assist him gain industry credibility. After acquiring ample experience and skills, in 2009 his other dream became a reality: FUMU Empowering Connection was conceived.

Emmanuel and Vincent – a fellow entrepreneur and social developer – set up FUMU, which is a Non-Profit Organisation in the fashion industry. This was done with the aim of changing the lives of many disadvantaged young people who are discouraged by South Africa's ailing youth development and employment framework.

FUMU targets young people from previously disadvantaged backgrounds with no skills and no access to tertiary education, and trains them as fashion designers and fashion entrepreneurs.

Over the years, the programme has seen consistent growth and success. One important development was the expansion into manufacturing. FUMU Global Wear deals with mass production
